LOST WALLET RETURNED

Hunter Shamatt had just arrived in Las Vegas when he realized he had lost {his} wallet. It contained $60, a $400 paycheck, his bank card and his identification card. He was very upset, but he didn't want to make a big deal of it because it {was} his sister's wedding weekend. He thought he might have lost it on his Frontier flight from Omaha to Vegas, so he called the airline and reported {it} missing. No luck. After the wedding, a package arrived {at} completely intact -with a note {that\which} said: his home. It contained his wallet -"Hunter, I found this on a Frontier flight from Omaha to Vegas - row 12, under seat F. Thought you might want it back. All the {best}, Todd." And below that: "P.S. I rounded your cash up to an even $100 so you could celebrate getting your wallet back. Have Fun!!!" It took Hunter Shamatt a few minutes to believe {what\everything\anything} the note said. He wanted to thank the kind stranger, so he posted a picture {off\showing} the note on Facebook with a message asking {for} help to find Todd. Within days, he was in contact with the man, identified in local media reports as Todd Brown of Omaha. Shamatt wrote Brown a heartfelt thank-you: "Sir, what you've done for me is unheard of. I {never\hadn't\hardly\scarcely\barely} expected to see my wallet again, let alone with $40 more. Thank you so much, I've got student loans and it makes all the difference."
